STUFH

Students Team Up To Fight Hunger

As students depart college each year, they discard accumulated food items. Recognizing this food waste coupled with the pressing need of food banks to feed the hungry, colleges are now joining together with food banks in a simple three step process to collect thousands of pounds of foodstuffs.

Goals of STUFH

Over 27 Million people in the USA seek emergency food assistance. STUFH aims to:

- Help feed American families who are unable to benefit from our prosperous economy.
- Avoid waste of needed food products.
- Raise awareness on college campuses that there are those who are less fortunate who need a helping hand to survive.
- Strengthen ties between campus and community populations.

Easy 3 Step Process

1. Empty food bins are placed in college dormitories one week before school ends.
2. Students drop off their unopened non-perishable food items as they head home.
3. Full food bins are picked up by Food Bank.

STUFH: Past, Present & Future

In a pilot project at Cornell University in 1999, twenty bins were placed in ten dormitories and almost one thousand pounds of needed foodstuffs were collected in a week period at the close of school. By 2009, 218 colleges in 45 states have joined STUFH and over 3,400,000 pounds of food were collected.

CKI Partners with STUFH

STUFH is proud to announce its partnership with Circle Kiwanis International (CKI). CKI, sponsored by Kiwanis International, is the largest collegiate service organization in the world with 13,500 students on 450 college campuses in seventeen nations. This partnership will enhance both service organizations in their mutual goal of serving the needy.

Food Fights

The New Battleground

By tapping into intense university athletic rivalries, baseball, basketball and football competitions can help lead to helping the hungry and an even greater sense of school spirit. For the weeks leading up to the big game, colleges compete to see which one raises the most food to feed the hungry. For example, in Alabama, where the idea began, during the fall 2008 football season University of Alabama “defeated” Auburn University by raising 271,000 pounds of food versus 212,000 pounds. But obviously there are no losers in a competition that helps fight hunger. For information on how to start a food rivalry at your college, visit www.stuth.org/foodfight.

Feed The Children

Although the holiday season often reminds people to help feed the hungry, Spring and Summer are often forgotten times when it comes to donating food.

“The time of year that food banks need donations coincide with the time of year that we typically get the fewest. The timing of STUFH food drive is wonderful and has the direct benefit of feeding the hungry children.”

How To Join

Contact Program Director Dan Kahn at e-mail address dkahn@stufh.org or telephone (518) 506-5491. State your college, geographic location and dates of your final semester week.

Arrangements will be made to connect you and your college with your local food bank.

Time and location will be set for drop-off and pick-up of food bins.

To establish a STUFH Chapter on your campus, email dkahnstufh.org

“I am so pleased that the STUFH program was created! I feel this program is an easy way for students to give back to their local communities. It’s a great feeling to know the unused food items are going for a good cause as opposed to being thrown away. Every year I get phone calls from The students wanting to know when we are going to start collecting food again.. It’s as if they can’t wait for the collection boxes to appear!”

Kristie Brinkley

Coordinator of Volunteer Services at the University of Central Missouri

“Although the pounds provided by STUFH are important, the real benefit lies in the partnerships we’re building. STUFH gets college students and faculty members actively involved in finding a solution to the growing problem of hunger. STUFH helps us reach young people on a personal level, and sends a reminder to faculty, staff and the community that the need to feed is a problem that can be solved. We’ve had student teams take a lead in securing funds, volunteerism, and raising awareness to the problem of hunger in our society. We’re happy to be involved with STUFH.
